Sometimes when you get this transition and you shift here, right, I have the opportunity as I stand up to really grab his ankle and this forces sort of a, you know, dueling ankle locks if you will, you know, we're at a Mexican standoff. Now he gives the opportunity for Majid to grab the ankle and, you know, you get here a lot and it's sad but true. Unfortunately, guys are just kind of just trying to rank on each other's ankles to build up, you know, if they're in competition and or, you know, maybe you're in a street scenario where someone's holding your ankles and, you know, maybe it's a younger brother that you don't want to slap in the face, but anytime that they get this position, you know, you can always just go belly down or since I have the higher ground, but he's going to have an ankle lock, good. I just have to focus on keeping my weight on that foot and now I'm here. As I do that, I can always unwind it and get here and step out over and I'm in front of his guard or the other option would be I'm here to bring this leg over his body and ending in the leg drag position that I'm here.
