so now we're going to use those folding passes and look at how those connect to half guard passes so more often than not okay if my opponent is going to work his way out of this folding pass position if i'm doing everything right is that he's going to be able to sneak this bottom leg out okay because even though i'm trying to contain that bottom leg and get heavy there's room oftentimes for that bottom foot to work through especially if he's able to open my elbow slightly and now he's going to shoot that top leg through to try to capture my leg and he has to now turn to face me into his half guard because he's at the wrong angle so i have to be anticipating this and as i feel that control uh kind of dissipating as i start to lose him i'm ready to advance my shoulder line winning the underhook as he turns back don't wait until after he achieves the half guard to try to fight the half guard we want to get ahead of it so as nick starts to go to turn back to me i'm meeting him with my chest over his chest shoulder line over the shoulder line now i can establish my clinch and complete the pass so again regardless of how we find a folding pass situation okay we have you know many situations that uh that can lead us into that folding pass position we're just looking here from the shin shield so i'm walking him over okay maybe i didn't even contain that's something that could happen too is maybe i didn't even manage to contain his legs between my legs in the first place that leg stayed free and as as he adjusts i adjust find my upper body control and complete the pass
