All right guys, we're gonna see another angle here and another possibility of the Shibon sweep when somebody try to stop you. So, we're in the same kind of mechanic here. And I try to sweep from here, I go to the side way. I try to go, but unfortunately, he cut the ball. He cut too much, you know, post himself too much wide here. So what I'm gonna do, I'm gonna slide my arm outside. I'm gonna move my head outside here. And I'm gonna more rotate. When I rotate here, notice that, look like I'm on the ground, but I barely touch the ground. Everything here, I'm completely on top of my opponent here. And my goal here is to go towards him over here. The more I can go towards him, the better. The more I can put weight, the better here. And what you do here from this case, you just rotate right there. So, you just can, it's a very small, but you gotta have all the weight over there, otherwise the guy's gonna roll. So, one time from different angle. So you go over here, you go for the sweep. Somehow the guy base, you move yourself out, and end up right here. And from this position, you stay close to the ground, and you just rotate towards him over here. So that's what you're looking for. Put weight on him right there, and you twist it. So that's another variation for the Shibona sweep.
