

Metadata: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5XzRyAOxe-w>

Guys, I want to show you another variation for when my opponent is hiding his arm. So guys, first thing that I do, as I said before, is to make him post the hand, all right? Because unless I make him post, you know, I can trap his wrist and come up over here. But sometimes, you know, he's going to put all his weight on his feet over there. So I'm trying to make him post and even though I have a good grip, I'm tight, I'm not able to make him post. So when that happens, he gives me space to come up on my knees, all right? So basically, what I have to do once I realize the space is to bring my foot closer to me in order to come up over here, all right? I have to keep my head, come here, over here. I have to keep my head tight on my shoulder all the time, all right? So I'm trying to make him post, but I come up, okay? And as soon as I come up, I'll pull his knee inside my legs at the same time that I use my underhook to throw him that way. So I pull like this, all right? And I push at the same time. Like this, okay? So in the end, you know, sometimes I'll end up on the side control, other times half guard. It's pretty common actually to end up on half guard, but the mechanic of this move, I'm trying to make him post, I come up, so I pull and as I pull his knee inside, I use my underhook to throw him that way. And if I have a chance, for sure, I'll choose to end up on the side control. Okay, one more time. So I'm looking to make him post, he's strong, I come up, and then I pull, and I use my underhook arm to throw him down, and end up on top over here, okay? Let's go to the other side.