so another reaction that can happen when we're trying to roll him is that this grip is not the strongest grip so if he doesn't want to go and he starts yanking his arm out most likely he will be able to pull that arm out but this is fine he's giving me the space that I need that I need to escape so once I'm here I go to roll all the sudden I start feeling a lot of resistance of him pulling the arm out the moment I feel the arm coming out I'm just gonna let it go I extend my right leg back and I just sit back to guard he's taking his weight off of me which is very hard for him to stay tight I can just rotate under him getting back to guard right away our leg position on this move it's very important once I'm here once I'm trying to extend and I feel the pull this leg must go extend out anytime I try to recover guard and I sit with my legs in between him it's easy for him to jump over my leg and end up on my back or on my side so it's very important that the leg goes outside before before you do roll so as I'm here I'm gonna try to roll I feel the resistance and extend see how this legs out that way you will prevent him from jumping over if he does jump over he's gonna try to he's gonna help you by getting back to guard if not scoot your hip under him and you have close guard
