Okay, so anytime I have the overhook, I have a chance. Anytime there's an armpit and I have an overhook, I can hit this darts. In this kind of a butterfly guard where I'm sitting up tall, I like to play the falcon guard. I like to go all the way through and grab my bicep, okay? And then I can go for butterfly sweeps and a lot of things. But one thing that Nate or a lot of people will try to do is weave their arm out like this and just push me off and break you through out of it, okay? And if I'm willing to kind of change my angle and give up the guard, I can have a shot at the kill. So once I'm here and I see this hand get like this, at any moment, this hand should be able to go all the way through and this hand is gonna pull the head. And look, I move my body so that I can get the full up and then I should be able to roll and squeeze from there. So I have this grip, I'm waiting for his reaction. If that's the reaction he does, watch, I change my legs, grab the head, lock the darts, flip him over, and I'm gonna start walking into him and squeezing for the finish. Okay, one last time. Butterfly guard, one leg could be out, one leg could be in. You don't really have to close guard because you need to move. Grab your bicep, wait for this. That happens, take this leg, change it to the other side, pull his head, shoot this through, lock the darts, rock back, flip him a little bit, now start walking into him, squeezing.
