

Metadata: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dD6eQxTTeiE>

One of the nicest submissions I know, it is from the half guard, the jeep half guard actually and I go to some reverse kimura, alright? So, I'm here passing guard and something happens, I can go straight to this position, I can control the shoulder, doing the same details I said before, I explained before, cutting the chest and then go straight to this position, but as I am, I play on the half divisions, my opponents usually do some jeep half guard, so they go straight to the half guard, and when I see, I get on this position, and what is the perfect way to position yourself on the top? So, when my opponents get the jeep half guard, I need to cave his back and his neck, using my knee like this, and this kind of hook I was using on the shoulder and grab my own knee, so when I get to connect my knee, not actually behind, but on the side of my opponent's shoulder, I can feel I'm heavier on the top position, so I'm heavier on his shoulders, he can move his hip, but I have my hand on the mat, and using this hand, I can feel I have some great base on the top. I have some great base on the top, so what am I gonna do? So, if I get this position, I can easily sit down, I start to put my butt on the mat, and I can lay down on diagonal like this, to keep pressuring his shoulder, I'm gonna go to some reverse kimura, but I need to keep my angles working perfect, so I have my hand on my knee, and I start to drop my body to this side, when I drop my body to this side, I need to slide my hand and work on the elbow, after I work on the elbow, and I start to bring my elbow to the opponent, this is gonna be his real action, so by pulling his elbow down, you know, because I'm pulling his elbow, so he will feel pressure on the shoulder, and he needs to do a bridge to leave a little bit of pressure, you know, so I start to put pressure, he do a bridge, and I can swing my leg, and then bend my leg.