The next submission we're going to work, it's going to be what's called a Japanese necktie. Okay, so first we're going to go over just the basics of it, what it is and how to get familiar with it. So, it's from the vice grip as well, all right, but I break my opponent down, okay, and let's say that I can't shoot this darts for whatever reason, all right? So I connect my hands and I fall over their head here, okay? And now I can't just fall over their head because they might even roll to their back or they might come up to their knees, whatever, okay? So I need to have at least this leg hook, one leg hook, like I've talked about a lot in this, I want to have the bottom leg hook so they can't get up to their knees, okay? So I'm over their head, I'm falling over and I'm pushing my stomach into the side of their head, okay? And that's driving the blade part of my forearm into their carotid artery, okay? So, one more time, all right, it's, I'm pushing their head or their carotid artery into, sorry, into this blade part of my forearm, okay? My hip is perfectly on the mat and I have that leg hook, okay? So one more time, I break them down with the vice grip, okay, I step in between the legs and I fall over their head and now this is where I'm going to get to finish, okay? I'm still pinching my knees, I'm still doing everything, but that's the finish, okay? So now that we know how to, or how to get to it, or what improving their Japanese neckline is, okay, now we're going to finish setups and finishes, so get into that right now.
