All right guys, now I'm going to do a rolling back escape. Once I have the situation, I'm trying to go to my good side to escape and my opponent is trying to bring me to the right side for him to attack. So between the transition, when we are in the halfway, I have to give up the position. But the idea is to use his strength and his timing against him, right? So once I feel he's really putting a lot of effort, I give up the position and roll because once I do that, I'm going to finish in the right spot, in the right side to defend, right? So here guys, so let's say I'm here in the good side to defend, or a lot of times he brings me to the good side. And now, so I'm trying to defend and he's trying to bring me here. Yeah, you see I'm putting a lot of effort here with this leg and he's escaping the hip. Eventually he's going to bring me to the good side for him to subdue me. So once I get here, it's better for him. But of course, it's still like trying to go to the other side. So I'm going to breach and then we're going to keep that fight. You see, I feel like my core is really tight here and I feel like a lot of tension on here because he's trying to bring me. So what I have to do, I'm going to feel when he's putting a lot of pressure, I'm going to go with him. So look, I'm going to make a good grip here and I'm going to roll into the side. So I'm going to give him the position. So we fight. So you see how he's stopping here because now I'm on the good side, okay, for me. Right, I'm going to put my head on the mat and here's going to be the simple side. You see, we are not in the same line anymore. So look, you see how I turn my hip, make a breach so he's not on my back, all right. He still has the grips, but he's not on my back, all right. So now, I'm going to be like similar on the first move, right? I pull it, pass over, and then slide, slide my hip off, take the leg on the grip, run away, hide my elbow, and slide him underneath until I finish under if he has.
